

The Revolutionary War Cemetery established in 1716 as the Burying Place

Dedicated June 17, 1776, the Revolutionary War Monument honors more than 400 Sudbury soldiers and sailors who served in the Revolutionary war. It is located within Mount Pleasant Cemetery, across Concord Road.

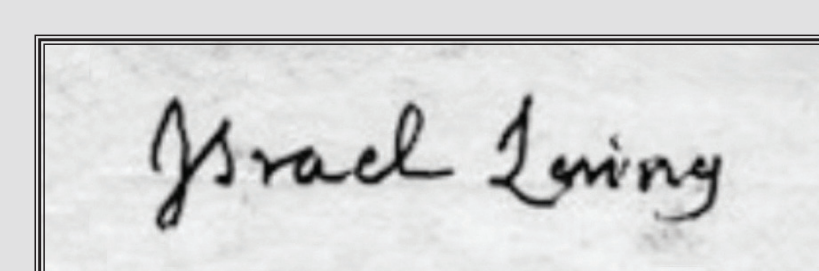

Deacon Josiah Haynes was the first Sudbury soldier killed in the Revolutionary War. He died April 19, 1775 at the age of 79.

The burial of Sarah Haynes Noyes was the cemetery's first known interment. She died July 24, 1727 at the age of 29.

Simeon was an enslaved person in the Loring household with his mother Hannah, who was present throughout his life. He was emancipated shortly before his death on May 10, 1755 at the age of 22.

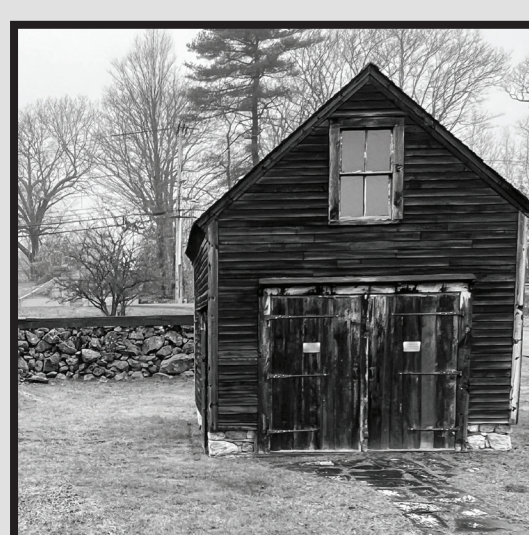

The Loring family raised their seven children at the Loring Parsonage, built for Israel Loring (1682-1772), Sudbury's spiritual leader for 66 years, and his wife, Mary Hayman (1682-1769). They are buried in the Hopestill Brown, Esq. Tomb, which received its final interment in 1852.

The Revolutionary War Cemetery, originally established in 1716 as the Burying Place, is the oldest burial ground in Sudbury. The last known interment was in 1895. The oldest graves are located at the center of the yard. In 2012, ground-penetrating radar investigations identified approximately 976 possible burial sites and an indeterminate number of buried headstones.

As of 2025, the exact number of individuals interred here is still unknown, with 509 identified, so far. Their names are listed below the map.

Experience Wight Richardson (1705-1786) was an extraordinary woman. She wrote an extensive diary of her life in Sudbury beginning in 1728, and ending in 1782, four years before her death. The Sudbury Historical Society holds a copy of her diary.

The Hearse House was built c1800 as a shelter for the town's funeral carriage that transported individuals to the nearby cemetery for interment. When necessary, the building doubled as a storage site for the town's stock of ammunition.
